this album is something like a blur travel diary second reading.
there is some places, with their cultural prints, their people, voices, noises.
their changes, fast, where past and present, still, a bit, cohabit.
the neoliberalism joyfully conquering under brightfull colors, selling its spectacle.
there is habits, faith, misery, and the way we looked a them, with our own cultural construction.
there is all the small details that our eyes and ears catch, their everyday-poetry, and the personnal story we build upon them. the rain falling on the roof. the smells. Foods. Animals.
it's about be somewhere for a while, then move, then work on its memories.
it's not supposed to be right, or fair, juste one of the possibles.
